RESEARCH AREAS:

Pragmatics & Linguistics, Health Communication, Argumentation Theory

My area of scientific activity is the philosophy of language that I consider as a starting point to understand some important issues about the nature of human communication and human nature. Focusing my attention on issues with a strong social and ethical relevance, my research reflects the cross-cutting relevance of these issues and promotes multidisciplinary through a cross-thematic approach. With regard to the latter point, I used suggestions and evidence coming from linguistics, pragmatics, argumentation theory, psychology and health communication. In all these contexts, I have adopted a pragmatic point of view.

RESEARCH INTERESTS:

Reasoning and argumentation, Communication in chronic care, Metaphor theory, Emotion theory

My current research interests regard the role of reasoning and argumentation in the social and collaborative dimension of human communication. Working on the project “Healthy Reasoning”, I have brought to the research my competencies in the study of emotions and reasoning. Together with Fabrizio Macagno, I am designing a pilot study on how and which metaphors have a higher potential to foster patient understanding, working on the argumentative structure presupposed in any metaphor. More specifically, I am interested in analyzing the main theoretical and practical problems with respect to the relationship between metaphors and argumentation. To this purpose, I am using a pragmatic-argumentative model of communication to reconstruct the metaphorical meanings in terms of the underlying presuppositions. Offering an explanation of presuppositions in terms of presumptive reasoning, I intend to analyze different types of misunderstandings originating in the use of metaphors in real contexts.
